"Luigi Veronelli - walking the land" is an exhibition on a great intellectual, who has always privileged the work on the field rather than roles and balances linked with the power. Thanks to over 600 amongst documents and exhibited objects, the show represents also a journey through Italy, searching for the "true", seen as people, lands and products having lost all their identity.

All the stages of his life and his work develop around Veronelli's cellar: The Choice: Publishing and Journalism; The Economic Boom and Cookery; The Long Journey through Italy; Wine and Wines; Rai and L'Etichetta; The Noes and the Civil Commitment; The Last Great Battle: Olive Oil.

The focus is indeed on wine and food, but above all on the respect of the job, of the land and its transformations, going beyond the mere alimentary peculiarities. Rites and myths, new models of relations between the farmer and the market, between nature and science, between our century-old traditions and the new visions of the world, because knowledge, as well as democracy, increase thanks to the differences of points of view. And in this endless process, wine, just like food, represents a share of the whole.
